

Mr. Jones, the art dealer, was talking to Wendy and Mrs. Brown.

He was saying, "I do not paint myself. I collect great art. These paintings were found in an attic. They are over one hundred years old. This one was painted before we even had electricity."

Sam looked carefully at the painting. It was a picture of a family sitting around a table in a kitchen. On a counter in the corner of the room, Sam could see a toaster.

Bree and Rico walked over to the boy by the fountain. He was wearing a button on his shirt that said, "Hi, I'm Jake and I'm deaf." Cody used Amislan, or sign language for the deaf, to ask if he knew what had happened to Steve's CD player.

Jake did not seem to understand, so she signed the question a second time. Again, he did not understand.

Just then, a small boy lost control of his bike and slammed into a trash can!